Re: Comments on National Emission Standards for Hazardous Air Pollutants: Coal- and Oil-Fired Electric Utility Steam Generating Units Review of the Residual Risk and Technology Review, Docket ID No. EPA-HQ-OAR-2018-0794

Dear Administrator Regan:

Pollution from power plants threatens the health of communities across the country. EPA's new proposal to limit mercury and air toxics from power plants is a necessary step forward for both public health and environmental justice and should go even further. I urge EPA to finalize the strongest, most health-protective standards without delay.

The emissions from coal- and oil-fired power plants include neurotoxins like mercury and cadmium, which can cause devastating birth defects; known carcinogens such as arsenic and benzene; acid gases that can make breathing more challenging; dioxins that can affect the reproductive system; and more. Limiting these dangerous toxins and hazardous pollutants to the lowest level through the alternative regulation under consideration would avoid approximately 300 premature deaths, more than 100,000 avoided asthma attacks and more than 12,000 lost workdays in just one year.

Previous standards to reduce coal and oil-fired power plant emissions have dramatically cut toxic air pollution. But emissions of dangerous air toxics are still a major health concern for communities near power plants. According to EPA data from 2021, power plants emitted 13% more mercury emissions compared to the previous year. This uptick in emissions leads to an increased burden on communities of color and people of low income who are more likely to live in communities with a power plant located nearby and on Indigenous communities that rely on fishing from waters impacted by these plants for nutrition.

Please protect the health of my family by finalizing the strongest possible limits on mercury and air toxics from power plants.

Sincerely,
